We Cannot Say It Is There, And Yet We Cannot Say It Isn't - Exhibition at the VPAG by Scott Bertram

Date and Time: Tuesday, February 23 10:00 a.m. - 5:00 p.m.

Scott Bertram is introducing a new body of large-scale abstract paintings in the exhibition titled We Cannot Say It Is There, And Yet We Cannot Say It Isn't at the Vernon Public Art Gallery. The paintings in the exhibition are very enigmatic and autonomous in that they do not reference the known world in any way. Formally, the paintings are akin to other non-representational structures which reference and construct deep space. Bertram's paintings are ambiguous in the sense that they portray space which is often contradictory and the visual structures do not lend themselves to verbal interpretations which is always an issue with non-representational abstraction. This fact is also reflected in Bertram's mode of operation while creating images without a preconceived idea what the painting will look like once considered finished.

His painting process relies on setting up circumstances for the chance and accidents to occur, then accepts the outcomes as a partial solution of his pictorial propositions.
